

My 82 year old mother and I (58 years old) subscribed to satellite radio only one month ago. We did this because the choice of available stations in the Pensacola area is relatively limited to country, hip hop, a couple of hard rock stations, two soft rock stations, and one oldies station. Needless to say, the variety here is not what we had in Colorado. The satellite radio has been a wonderful addition to our daily life. Both Mom and I like to have music on almost all day long. Satellite radio has allowed us to listen to the type of music we are in the mood for on any given day, from the forties, fifties, what XM radio refers to as "Sunny", etc. Advances in technology always cause organizations with vested interest to fight change. I am old enough to remember the changes and arguments that happened with the addition of cable TV and then satellite TV. Restrictions on those items were fought and have over the years been lost. Why waste additional government dollars on something that in a few years will be the norm? Another example of change that has been a fight for many years by American drug companies is the importation of drugs from Canada. This is already in the process of changing. Again, why waste the time and money. There are numerous other examples that can be listed but neither you or I have the time. Please let satellite radio continue to provide and expand for the enjoyment of people such as my mother and I. Thank you, Sharyn McGrath
